When we feed Long Islanders in need, we transform their lives.

We feed so that our neighbors can move from lives of instability to lives bolstered by security. Food is the beginning – and when we extend a hand to help feed those in need, we help them not just to eat, but to overcome so many other obstacles in life.

We feed to triumph in times of crisis. When we face a crisis, like the unprecedented devastation caused by Superstorm Sandy, we feed to support those who have lost so much and those who need simple kindness in difficult times.

We feed to give our children a strong start in life. Because nutritious meals help our kids grow and learn and thrive – and because how they eat today will affect them in many ways, for the rest of their lives.

We feed to give back to those who have served with dignity. We embrace the opportunity to come to the aid of our seniors and veterans. They reach out in need of food and assistance, and we are honored to respond.

We feed to transform lives, and we find ourselves transformed.

20 Proud Years of Service Celebrated in 2012!
Dear Friends,

Like many of you, when I think of 2012, I think about Superstorm Sandy and the devastation it left for friends, colleagues, neighbors, communities and businesses. For so many of us, Sandy truly defined 2012; the storm took hold of our reality and transformed it forever.

Thousands were displaced when their homes were irreparably damaged or flooded. Even more of us lost electricity for days or weeks in the storm’s wake. Suddenly, having nothing to eat and no means of purchasing food became real. Hunger (even if temporary) became a frightening personal experience for thousands of Long Islanders who never had known hunger before.

Out in the field for the first two weeks post-Sandy, I repeatedly saw a heart-wrenching despair I never thought I would see. But then, time and again, I also saw incredible kindness and unflagging spirit. The experience changed me profoundly.

And I was awed to see that Island Harvest’s staff – 100% of whom were impacted themselves by the storm – still came to work every day, because they felt so strongly about helping others.

Perhaps Island Harvest touched you in the days and weeks after Sandy. Maybe it was the millions of meals and tons of water and supplies that we delivered. Or perhaps you were one of the 2,500 volunteers who stood shoulder-to-shoulder with us. And if you were among the thousands of contributors or food donors, we are grateful for your partnership. In the middle of all of the destruction and chaos left by Sandy, I found a silver lining for Long Islanders in the generous outpouring of support from friends, neighbors and even complete strangers.

Island Harvest is motivated to feed by a harsh and simple reality: that our help is needed now more than ever before. In the months before Sandy, Island Harvest proudly celebrated a milestone: our 20th Anniversary helping Long Island. And since Sandy? We have intensified our focus on the people of Long Island. We continue to feed and serve the many in need, and we continue to help our communities recover.

I firmly believe that every gift to Island Harvest -- before or after Sandy, and financial, in-kind or volunteering -- is a sacred investment in the people of Long Island, and in our mission and cause. Thank you for joining us!

Sincerely,

Randi Shubin Dresner
President & CEO
When you step into an Island Harvest facility, you instantly can recognize a unique energy. It is the same energy that drives our largest initiative – and the core of our work – our Food Collection & Distribution Program. To feed Long Island, we collect millions of pounds of food and product and then turn them right around to distribute them into our communities. It is an enormous undertaking that takes a strong team of partners.

And what a team it is! Our dedicated volunteers and staff pick up quality surplus food and product from over 800 local retailers, wholesalers, distributors and farms. Our national donors (through our membership with Feeding America) provide additional food and product. Our contributors provide the core support that we need. And local companies, schools, civic groups, individuals and faith-based organizations organize food drives – 1,000 in 2012 – to round out our food collection.

We then distribute all of this collected food and product through our network of nearly 570 food pantries, soup kitchens, shelters, residences, day care and senior centers and other community-based non-profit organizations. Our network partners give the food and supplies out to hundreds of thousands of individuals who are at risk of hunger. In addition, we distribute the collected food through our mobile food pantries and our direct service programs.

When we feed, it truly is a team effort.
WE FEED ... THROUGH OUR CENTER FOR COMBATING CHILDHOOD HUNGER

Dismissal bells ring at schools across Long Island, and thousands of children charge out the doors, eager to be anywhere but in school. But for over 110,000 of these students, being in school means school breakfasts and lunches -- and daily sources of nourishment -- while dismissal brings uncertainty and hunger.

These children deserve more. So during 2012, Island Harvest partnered with schools and community-based programs throughout Nassau and Suffolk to provide more than 250,000 nutritious meals to children through our Kids Weekend Backpack Feeding Program and our Summer Food Service Program. Our contributors have made this partnership thrive.

Dear Island Harvest

Thank you for giving my family food every Friday. It helps my mom and sisters not to be hungry. When my family was in the motel and we didn’t have anything to eat, we could count on Island Harvest.

- Alana, 4th Grader in the Weekend Backpack Feeding Program

THE KIDS WEEKEND BACKPACK FEEDING PROGRAM helps children who need school breakfasts and lunches but are not guaranteed solid meals on the weekends. Each Friday afternoon, the Program’s students receive our special food packs to take home for the weekend. With four nutritious and ready-to-eat meals, two snacks, two servings of milk and information for kids and adults, each food pack brings security.

During the 2011-12 school year, this Program distributed over 225,000 meals to more than 1,600 at risk kids in 20 Long Island schools. The program has more than tripled in scope since it was started just seven years ago!

Island Harvest’s commitment to our children doesn’t end with the school year. When school is out for the summer, our focus turns to sandwiches and pizza, juice packs and fresh fruit … and some nutrition games for kids of all ages. Our SUMMER FOOD SERVICE PROGRAM brings us to camps and recreation centers across Long Island, where we provide nutritious on-site lunches for children who won’t have access to free or reduced school lunches until the schools reopen in September.

In July and August, this program served 25,368 daily lunches to 1,474 eager children at 27 sites throughout Long Island, bringing welcome nutrition – and some summertime fun – to kids in need. We gratefully acknowledge supporters like the New York State Department of Education and Nassau County for making all of this possible for our kids.
It is disturbing that in the midst of a wealth of resources here on Long Island, we are seeing a growing number of seniors living in poverty. Many have seen their retirement savings wiped out from the ongoing economic recession. Still others live solely on Social Security or other assistance programs.

To meet their growing need, we launched a SENIOR MOBILE FOOD PANTRY. The Pantry brings food directly to seniors and people with disabilities who may have trouble reaching local food sources. It makes regular weekly visits to subsized housing sites in Glen Cove, Central Islip, Freeport, and the Shinnecock Reservation. During 2012, our program’s seniors and people with disabilities received nearly 76,018 pounds of food, which supplemented more than 63,348 meals.

We feed, and we support. Our Pantry offers nutrition counseling, cooking demonstrations and other practical help. And with that support and the needed, nutritious food, our Senior Mobile Food Pantry brings trained representatives from partner organizations to provide information and assistance in areas like benefits eligibility, tax preparation and fall prevention. Generous supporters like the Horace and Amy Hagedorn Fund, Suffolk County and the AARP Foundation made this work possible.

OPERATION: HOPE

For those who already have given so much through military service, readjusting to civilian life should be easy. But all too often these days, those who have served our nation suffer -- grappling with injuries or trauma, struggling to reintegrate into their communities or facing seemingly impossible challenges starting new careers in a weak economy. Our military members and veterans with the fewest supports tragically may face hunger and food insecurity. That’s where Island Harvest steps in.

Through Operation: HOPE, our mobile food pantry specifically designed to help veterans and the families of active duty personnel, we bring direct help. We feed.

Our volunteer Operation: HOPE teams (made up of veterans themselves) deliver “HOPE packs” of food and necessities to the homes of veterans and military families in need. But our help doesn’t end with food. For when we feed our veterans and active duty family members, our Operation: HOPE volunteers also deliver help through information and hands-on assistance about available benefits, counseling, continuing food assistance through SNAP (food stamps) and other core benefits that can transform lives.
Superstorm Sandy struck in October. It was a “perfect storm” of destruction that plowed across Long Island. The storm’s deadly combination destroyed hundreds of thousands of homes and businesses across our region, left thousands homeless and a million households without utilities and wove a trail of ruin. All of Long Island -- from western Nassau to eastern Suffolk -- came out of Sandy needing basic, urgent help.

As Sandy ravaged Long Island’s communities, but even more so after the storm pulled away from our coasts, Island Harvest was out on the streets, doing what we do best alongside first responders: feeding and providing relief across the Island. Contributions helped make the impossible … possible.

In Sandy’s aftermath, Island Harvest did more than we expected to.

- We got into neighborhoods where nobody else could and provided relief to the Island’s most desperate.
- We distributed food and product on a massive scale: 5.5 million meals (or 6.6 million pounds of food).
- We sourced over 300 tractor trailer loads of food and supplies from providers in 26 states.
- We ramped up warehousing and distribution capabilities through the donated use of five warehouses and two off-site freezer locations.
- We supplemented our full fleet of eleven trucks with six loaned trucks and tractor trailers to accommodate the huge influx of food and product.
- We maintained field communications in the roughest of post-hurricane conditions.
- We acted alongside first responders in the field, providing immediate relief to them, as well.
- We activated an intensive volunteer effort specific to this unique situation: 2,500 volunteers and 40 corporations, dedicating 6,200 hours of service.
- We sourced 4,000 gallons of donated diesel fuel to keep our fleet of vehicles on the roads when fuel and transportation were severely limited.
“Hurricane Sandy tested Nassau County in ways unimaginable. And during our darkest hours, and for the last 10 months, Island Harvest was one of our top partners in ensuring the needs of the Survivors were constantly met. Operating outside of their normal scope of operations and mission, Island Harvest continuously provided countless prepared meals, relief supplies and comfort to all those who found themselves faced with the trials of getting back on their feet.”

Craig J. Craft, Commissioner
Office of Emergency Management
Nassau County, NY
Island Harvest was on Long Island’s front lines during and immediately after the storm, providing food and water in the hardest hit communities and even providing food and supplies for immediate responders -- from local police and fire departments to the American Red Cross.

Anticipating the worst as the storm approached, we shored up our stored food, water and supplies in the days just before the storm. But once Sandy had come and gone, the sheer amount of these items that were needed across the Island left us scrambling to meet a massive demand. With no time, Island Harvest tapped into all available resources to source our food and supplies and distribute them in our neighborhoods.

In November and December 2012 alone, Island Harvest distributed more than 3 times our regular output of product and supplies.

Once we had distributed all available product from our warehouses, we then secured more urgently-needed product through our longstanding partners off-Island (including 113 tractor trailer loads from our Feeding America network partners). To handle the extraordinary resources, we relied upon donated facilities and enlisted the help of seven out-of-state experts in disaster-related work.

In the wake of the storm, we fed Long Island. But just as importantly, we extended our hands to help. We gave comfort and sympathy, offered encouragement and support and embraced our neighbors in the true spirit of Island Harvest. Through it all, our community delivered “above and beyond.” Our heartfelt thanks go out to the countless people who contributed funds to support this effort.
ISLAND HARVEST’S LONGER-TERM SANDY RESPONSE

WE FEED ... THROUGH STEADY SUPPORT AND KEY PARTNERSHIPS TO HELP LONG ISLAND THROUGH CONTINUING RECOVERY

When 2012 came to a close and Long Island (ever so gradually) started coming back into its own, we all came to realize that recovery would be a process – long and hard for each of our devastated communities and so many of our neighbors.

So moving far beyond 2012, we have continued to help. To feed.

2013 has seen the start of remarkable initiatives for Island Harvest with valued longstanding partners … like the Transitional Feeding Program that came about through the generous support of The American Red Cross. Understanding that the struggle after an event of this magnitude continues well beyond the immediate, we seized the opportunity to feed Long Islanders through this program, distributing over 2.7 million meals (including 3.4 million pounds of food), and added to this amount with over one million pounds of additional food and non-food products.

And as Long Island continues its recovery, we continue our recovery work.
When we feed, it’s not always “just” food. At Island Harvest, our contributors also help us to feed the search for knowledge and awareness about hunger. And we feed the initiative that will help us – collectively – to reduce hunger across all of Long Island.

Our Education & Outreach Initiatives operate all year long to raise awareness of the many interrelated hunger issues in our communities. These initiatives help us to spread useful information about nutrition and healthier eating, and they help us to advocate for public policies to help those in need. In addition, by training people in our partner programs, we help them to serve their own clients and help them to grow toward self-sufficiency.

We offer our free Finding Solutions workshops to the Member Agencies within our network year-round. We know that when we help to “train the trainers” at these workshops, what we offer goes back to everyone at our Member Agencies and then beyond, to their clients. Our assistance – through workshops on food safety, SNAP (food stamps), hands-on cooking and children’s health -- is multiplied, ultimately helping many more people in need. And thanks to videoconferencing technology, we’ve held workshops simultaneously in multiple sites across Long Island.

We feed the effort to reduce hunger through advocacy, which is stronger because of the Mobilized Interfaith Coalition Against Hunger (MICAH). Through MICAH, 400 community leaders representing 270 different Long Island congregations come together to remove barriers to food security. Joint action through letter writing campaigns, workshops, town-hall meetings and information sharing means that the many individual voices within MICAH unite to bring progress and make an impact.

With education and outreach programming throughout the year, Island Harvest gratefully relies upon support from the Asofsky Family Foundation, MAZON: A Jewish Response to Hunger and others to do this important work.
5,000 plus generous people. Our friends, neighbors, relatives and coworkers on Long Island who help us to feed in every way possible.

These are the people who make up our corps of Island Harvest volunteers. They are children and adults, male and female, in the workforce and retired. Island Harvest would not be able to function … to feed … as effectively as we do without our volunteers. They donate food, contribute funds, host food drives, conduct food runs, visit schools and community groups to speak about hunger issues, help with accounting, assist with graphic design and chip in with a wide variety of necessary administrative tasks.

And how our volunteer community has grown! In 1993, Island Harvest was supported by 250 dedicated volunteers who helped with everything from food collection and distribution to office work. Now, our volunteer corps numbers more than 5,000! And because of the dedicated volunteers at our sides, we can devote more than 95 cents of every dollar directly to programming.

Island Harvest’s volunteers are people from all walks of life: students, seniors, concerned individuals and families, teams of company employees and eager civic groups. Our volunteers are committed to our mission and the work that we do. They are our greatest ambassadors!

Day in and day out, the contributions that our volunteers make are remarkable. All together? During 2012 alone, our volunteers contributed 73,921 hours of service … a value of more than 1.6 million dollars.
